Public Opinion

Roads, waste water/water treatment facilities, power plants: what needs to be developed to facilitate growing production?

- County governments take the lead
- Rural City Governments are underdeveloped
- Boom & Bust Predications and Fears

Public & Infrastructure

- TxDOT estimates that bringing one well into production is like driving 8 million passenger vehicles to and from a site
- Fatalities have increased
- Traffic counts at some intersections in Texas have increased from 3,500 to 20,000 per day
- Road damage from one 18 wheeler is equivalent to 9,600 cars

Public & Infrastructure

- In Texas, oil and gas revenue goes into rainy day fund (75%) and education (25%)
- Proposition 1 would split 75% evenly between rainy day and transportation (exception is toll roads)
- In 2013, TxDOT asked Legislature for $1.6 billion for energy related road work and received $225 million of which only $157 million went to Eagle Ford counties

Traffic accidents in the Eagle Ford area

A study of South Texas' medical needs to be released by Methodist Healthcare Ministries this week shows traffic accidents have risen in many counties, particularly those most affected by Eagle Ford Shale activity.

A snapshot of how the numbers changed from 2009 to 2011:

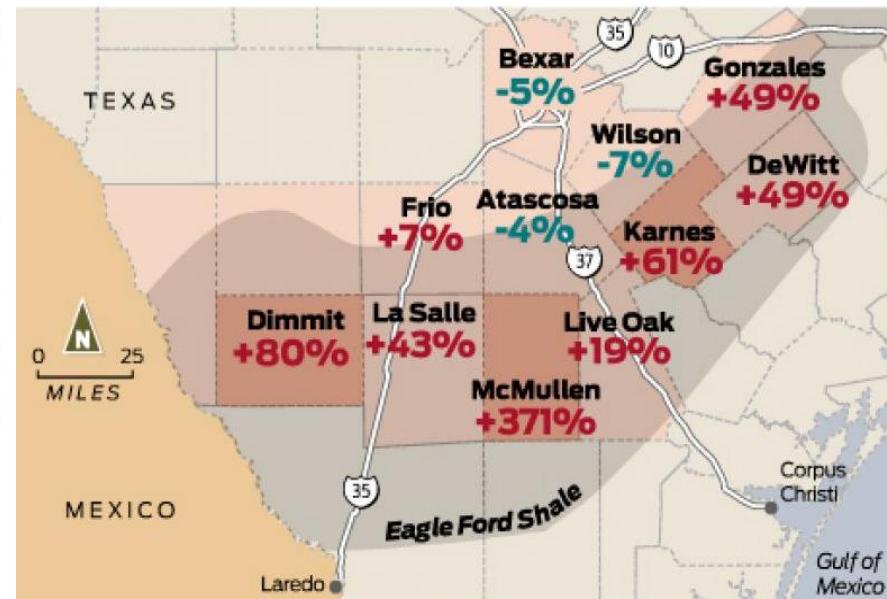

Work injuries in the Eagle Ford area

Workplace injuries also increased in many South Texas counties, according to the study.

Public Health

- Decline of healthcare workers in some counties
- Part-time workforce of 360,000 that is mostly uninsured, emergency rooms at some rural hospitals are feeling the effects
- “Despite the existence of public policy and government-sponsored programs, such as Medicare/Medicaid and affordable insurance, if there is no doctor, there is no care”
- Methodist Healthcare Ministries, which helps fund medical care and other health needs for low-income and uninsured people in South Texas, hopes the study will prompt conversation about the gaps in health services and how to plan for the future, Rebecca Brune said.
